

Accessible reception desk

The desk of belonging to Teresa Lang's photography and design studio in Oklahoma City is both a modernistic form of art along with being adorable to the eyes of anyone who will be entering the office. Looking at the approach that was taken in the building of the desk, the effort put in did not only focus on only making it appealing and pleasant to the eye but also durable and firm that it could hold several people using it once. Another exciting aspect of looking at the desk is that it is unique and appealing to the eye and will give the whole office a feeling of exoticness and luxury, along with bringing the impression of the modern aesthetic feeling of the whole office. The form of art taken in the creation of the piece of art is one that focuses on a mixture of contemporary forms of art that make it modern and unique.

Another aspect of the desk is also that it focuses on an accessible design that incorporates the use of varying disabilities. Among the people with disabilities that will be able to use the desk include those who move with wheelchairs since they were put in consideration while building the desk. The coloring of the desk is also meant to blend in well with the office structure, especially considering the color of the office and other furniture in the same office. By the consideration of the safety standards that have been set for the office, the material of the desk is fire resistant and meets that Life Safety and Fire Codes. The height of the desk also allows the secretary to effectively communicate with anyone on the other side while maintaining eye contact, which impacts the relationship between new clients and business.
